

Olweus Bullying Prevention Program Sponsorship Levels

The Olweus Bullying Prevention Program (OBPP) is the world's foremost bullying prevention program for students in grades K-12. Backed by more than thirty-five years of research, it incorporates what researchers and practitioners have identified as best practices in bullying prevention and intervention. The premiere training and consultation program for the OBPP is facilitated through faculty and staff within the Institute for Family & Neighborhood Life at Clemson University.

According to the National Academies of Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine's recently released report, Preventing Bullying through Science, Policy, and Practice, school-based bullying likely affects between 18 and 31 percent of children and youth. These numbers are higher for subgroups of youths who are particularly vulnerable, such as youths who are LGBT and youths with disabilities. This has a negative impact on students' mental and physical health, attendance, and school performance. You can make a difference!
